Chapter 1 by Strawberrychan17

His words crashed into one another while he pushed her out of his way. He couldn't stop laughing. Was she being serious? When he swiveled back around to look at her, he discovered the startling truth.

Chapter 2 by Charles RadWhale

Her eyes looked at him with despair. Her lips quivered, and he froze.

"no" He said. His voice was quiet, but it seemed loud in the silence of the room. "No, you- you have to be joking"

Her eyes told him she wasn't.

Chapter 3 by Christina Adkins

Since they had been dating six months earlier, they had been inseparable. From different sides of town, their love came unexpectedly. Richard, or Richie as his friends called him, came from a life of affluence. His father was a high-profile attorney and his mother the perfect southern woman. When she wasn't busy with local organizations, she was at the country club gossiping with her socialite friends over lunch. He and rainbows in the Lewis household though, Richie's mother would come home with a couple of afternoon cocktails, and would die old with their father. The daunting task of practically raising Richie and his sister Ella. The only time Richie's parents would talk to him would be to tell him what to do, and what he was doing wrong. Constantly criticized, he took sanctuary at the local bowling alley, where he happened to meet Jessica. He could remember vividly the day she came into the bowling alley with her friend Amber, who lived down the street from him. He remembered how she wasn't dressed in designer clothes or caked with makeup like most of the girls where he lived, but that her unpretentious appearance was striking. Amber was unlike the girls Richie had seen before, and he was immediately interested.
